The first few days back at Pemberley were agonizing for both Mr. and Mrs. Darcy. Elizabeth remained strong during the day, insisting that she was alright. But at night, Darcy would draw a sobbing Elizabeth into his arms and try his best to comfort her. Her tears were proof of how much grief she suffered for the loss of their child.

Lizzie liked the short walk. She was in between Darcy and Gigi and she was very conscious of the fact Darcy's right hand would sometimes brush against her left hand while walking. They sat in a booth; the girls on one side and Darcy on the other. Gigi sat on the edge, locking Lizzie in, with no escape. She was facing Darcy who was kind of smiling.
