International law, also known as public international law or law of nations, is the set of rules, norms, and standards generally regarded and accepted in relations between nations. It establishes normative guidelines and a common conceptual framework for states to follow across a broad range of domains, including war, diplomacy, human rights, and commerce.

Decolonization (American English) or decolonisation (British English) is the undoing of colonialism, the latter being the process whereby a nation establishes and maintains its domination over one or more other territories. The concept particularly applies to the dismantlement, during the second half of the 20th century, of the colonial empires established prior to World War I throughout the world.

The idea of drafting a document establishing a human rights protection mechanism in Africa was first conceived in the early 1960's. At the first Congress of African Jurists, held in Lagos, Nigeria in 1961, the Congress adopted a declaration otherwise referred to as the 'Law of Lagos' calling on African governments to adopt an African convention on human rights with a court and a commission.
