To Sleep - Poem by John Keats. Shutting, with careful fingers and benign, Our gloom-pleas'd eyes, embower'd from the light, Enshaded in forgetfulness divine; O soothest Sleep! if so it please thee, close, In midst of this thine hymn, my willing eyes. Or wait the Amen, ere thy poppy throws Around my bed its lulling charities; Then save me,...

"Sonnet to Sleep" by John Keats. Sleep is a common metaphor for death, and Keats uses certain words associated with death to convey the sense that he is weary of living and longs to pass from mortal existence. The words "embalmer" in the opening line and "casket" in the closing line actually serve as a way of entombing the entire poem.

To Sleep - John Keats by Lauren Wolfe on Prezi

The tone becomes more urgent in the sestet as the speaker twice calls on sleep to 'save' him. The two imperatives which end the sonnet - 'turn' and 'seal' are succinct and again suggest the urgency with which the speaker needs sleep's gentle attention in order to be saved from attack by his 'woes' and 'curious conscience'.

To Sleep: Language, tone and structure » John Keats ...

Keats earlier used the words benign and divine with positive connotations in regard to sleep, and the speaker begged for his eyes to close because of all his negative feelings. Thus, in context, the words shine and woes do not match with the words they rhyme with, and they therefore ironically rhyme.
